Chapter 1 by Monica

Day 1:

Just to clarify: it's NOT my first day in prison. No, I've been here for far too long. To be honest, I've lost track of the days. But, starting today, I am to record my mood, my health, and my thoughts in this journal as instructed by a Doctor Money. I recieved a letter from him earlier today, informing me that I'd be taking part in a ten-day "experiment" to "boost inmates' moral and lower suicide rates in prison". Whoever this Doctor Money character is, he seems powerful. I'm going to wrap this up, since I just got a letter from an old friend of mine. His name is Salvador, and he's a bit of a free spirit. I'm not particularly happy, as per usual, but I'm not depressed; prison food isn't the best on one's health, but I feel okay. Salvador is coming home from his travels! Wonderful news! Too bad I don't have the money for stationary. Ah well. He knows I'm safe.
